Memorial Day, observed on the last Monday of May, is a day when Americans pause to remember those who gave their lives during military service.

One piece of music that is often played to honor America's war dead is the bugle call, "Taps." The piece was composed during the Civil War by General Daniel Butterfield, whose Union Army unit suffered many losses during the Seven Day's Battle in Virginia in 1862. Although Butterfield could not write music, he hummed a melody to his aide, who translated it into musical notes. The call, which marked the end of the soldiers' day, was also intended to honor the fallen soldiers. "Taps" is now sounded at funerals and memorial services of those who served in the United States military.

These are the words to "Taps." Often, a shorter version, shown here in bold, is played: Fading light dims the sight, And a star gems the sky, gleaming bright. From afar drawing nigh. Falls the night. Day is done, gone the sun, From the lake, from the hills, from the sky. All is well, safely rest. God is nigh. Then good night, peaceful night, Till the light of the dawn shineth bright, God is near, do not fear. Friend, good night.
